Aiur/N, mighty in his strength, All impure passions overcame; And to his holy hermitage, Rejoiced at heart, great Indra came. He came disguised, --as corns lke gods, -- Even like an ancient anchorite, Wearied by a tiresome journey, Weak in limbs and weak in sight. And his crimson plaited locks Upon his white hair mingled fell, As the evening s crimson radiance Mingles with the moonbeams pale. All wrinkled with the mark of age, His eyes by fleecy eyebrows shaded, Were like the lotus of the lake, Its petals by a snow-fall faded. But his limbs, though very slender, Seemed instinct with strength and life; Like an aged man and hoary, Nourished by a careful wife! In feeble form concealed, great Indra Shone with more than mortal power; The radiant sun. is hidcbn faintly By a light...
